The latest Love Nikki Dream Love Happiness Event is here! Check out our complete guide to acing every stage battle and getting beautiful new Hall of Oath wedding suits, here. The new Event Love Nikki Dress Up Queen Happiness, called Dream Love, began on Friday (October 1st). The event invites players to become wedding designers in Hela Vi and compete with other stylists to acquire two new suits for weddings in the Oath Hall -- along with fun new makeup options and animated scenery. Players must complete five stage battles in case they earn oath rings and unlock parts of the new Dream Wedding and Farewell to Boudoir suits. In addition, seven more suits from previous events will be found in the event. So if there's an old happiness suit you haven't been able to finish, now's your chance! To help you take advantage of the new event, we've put together a complete guide to everything you need to know, including tips for mastering each stage battle. Love Nikki Happiness Event Guide: How The Dream Love Event Works The Dream Love Happiness event features two new wedding suits, but suits from previous events are also available. ELEX Wireless The latest Love Nikki event takes place in a separate Happiness event card. The event is broken into five stages of events or styling battles, similar to previous events of happiness. After the stage is over, you will be awarded oath rings that can be used to buy parts of suits for events. Complete each stage for free up to three times a day for a total of 15 attempts and win more than 75 free oath rings a day. You can, of course, spend 30 diamonds to reset the stages and complete them an additional three times. Here are the number of oath rings you will receive based on your stage score: S score - 5 Oath Rings A score - 3 Oath Rings B score - 2 Oath Rings C score - 1 Oath Ring F score - 0 Oath Rings Love Nikki Dream Love Happiness Suit Costs Dream Wedding and Farewell to Boudoir are prominent wedding suits in the June happiness event. The Oxford team that formulated a candidate for the coronavirus vaccine is preparing for the final phase of human trials of malaria jabs. Scientists from Oxford University's Jenner Institute worked on both vaccines. Jenner Institute Director Adrian Hill said the malaria vaccine will be tested on 4,800 children in Africa next year after early trials yielded promising results. The Labour leader is not experiencing any symptoms of the virus, a spokeswoman said. Accelerated approval of the coronavirus vaccine means restrictions could be loosened before the end of March, the health minister said. In an interview with The Telegraph, Matt Hancock said he could not wait to abolish this system altogether and for the country to return to life with mutual respect and personal responsibility rather than laws set out in parliament. It marks a change in rhetoric and tone from Mr Hancock, who has so far been seen in Whitehall as one of the strongest advocates of the strictest possible measures. Asked if the start of vaccine use to Britons this week could lead to a quicker end to restrictions in the first three months of next year, Mr Hancock said: Yes it will. Later, he said, There's no doubt that the vaccine is early... it will bring a moment when we can get rid of these damn limitations, but until then we must follow them. Help is on the way. Mr Hancock also said he was looking for some absolutely wonderful nonagenarians... to step forward and get vaccinated. He declined to say whether he was considering the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh, who are both in their 90s. Johannes Radebe, Gorka Marquez and Giovanni Pernice started the show in style. A male crocodile attacked a female crocodile enjoying the bank of the Daintree River in Queensland on December 4. David White made this video while driving the boat down the river and originally posted it on Facebook. White told Storyful that the large male crocodile is known as Big Nick, and the female is known as Bruce. In the video, Big Nick is seen approaching Bruce, attacking her and chasing her back into the river. Oh my God, he attacked her, you can hear White speak. I have no idea why Big Nick was so nasty, White told Storyful, though he speculated that Big Nick was they act out of jealousy, as Bruce was recently seen with another man named Scarface. In my 23 years on the river, I haven't seen such aggressive behavior toward a female, White said. Credit: David White via StoryfulCalifornia confirmed his presidential election Friday and named 55 voters who promised to vote for Democrat Joe Biden, formally handing him the majority of the electoral college needed to win the White House. Secretary of State Alex Padilla's official approval of Mr. Biden's victory in the state has brought his number of pledged voters so far to 279, according to a report in The Associated Press. That's just over the 270 threshold for victory. These steps in elections are often ignored by formalities. However, the hidden mechanics of electing a US president have attracted new attention this year as President Donald Trump continues to deny Mr Biden victory and is pursuing increasingly dubious legal strategies aimed at nullifying the results before they are finalised. While it has been apparent for weeks that Mr. Biden won the presidential election, his composure of more than 270 voters is the first step toward the White House, said Edward B. Foley, a law professor at Ohio State University. It is a legal milestone and the first milestone to have that status, Mr Foley said. Everything before that was conceived on what we call projections. The United Nations health chief declared Friday that positive results from coronavirus vaccine trials mean the world can begin to dream of an end to the pandemic. But he said rich and powerful nations must not trample on the poor and marginalised in a stampede for vaccines. Addressing the first session of the UN General Assembly on the pandemic, World Health Organisation Director General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus warned that while the virus can be stopped, the road ahead remains tenuous. He said the pandemic showed humanity at its best and worst, pointing to inspiring acts of compassion and self-sacrifice, breathtaking feats of science and innovation and harrowing demonstrations of solidarity, but also disturbing signs of self-interest, shifting blame and division. Speaking about the current rise in infections and deaths, Dr. Tedros said without naming any countries that where science is drowned out by conspiracy theories, where solidarity is marred by divisions, where sacrifice is replaced with self-interest, the virus thrives, the virus spreads. He warned that the vaccine would not address the vulnerabilities that lie at the root - poverty, hunger, inequality and climate change, which he said must be tackled when the pandemic is over. We cannot and must not go back to the same exploitative patterns of production and consumption, the same disregard for the planet that sustains all life, the same cycle of panic and interference and the same divisive politics that fueled this pandemic, he said. On vaccines, Dr. Tedros said the light is at the end it is growing steadily brighter, but vaccines must be shared equally as global public goods rather than as private goods that widen inequalities and become another reason some people are left behind. He said the WHO's ACT-Accelerator program for the rapid development and fair distribution of vaccines was in danger of becoming nothing more than a noble gesture without major new funding. He said $4.3bn (£3.2bn) was needed immediately to set the ground out for mass procurement and delivery of vaccines and an additional $23.9bn was needed for 2021. That's a total, Dr. Tedros said, less than half of the one percent of the $11 trillion incentive packages announced by the Group of 20, the world's richest countries. UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres made a similar appeal to fund the ACCELERATOR at the opening of a two-day session of the General Assembly on Thursday. Henrietta Fore, head of the U.N. children's agency UNICEF, said that when poor countries started trying to buy vaccines there were no vaccines available or the price was too high. UNICEF usually distributes two billion doses of vaccines a year, she said, and once it can get Covid-19 vaccines we'll double that next year, so we need all hands on deck. Despite multiple years of warnings, Dr Tedros said many countries are unprepared for the pandemic and assumes their health systems will protect their people. Many countries that have dealt with the crisis best have had experience responding to outbreaks of SARS, MERS, HINI and other infectious diseases, he said. The WHO has been sharply criticised for not taking a stronger and louder role in resolving the pandemic. At the meeting, Dr Tedros said it was obvious that the global preparedness system should pay attention. He said the WHO commission established in September is reviewing international health regulations. The WHO is also working with several countries to develop a pilot programme in which countries agree to regular and transparent reviews of their health preparedness, he said. The pandemic also demonstrated the need for the global system to share samples of viruses and other disease-causing pathogens to facilitate the development of medical countermeasures as global public goods, he said, welcoming Switzerland's offer to use a high-security laboratory to operate a new biobank. Dr Tedros also supported European Union chief Charles Michel's proposal for an international treaty under which the WHO would monitor the risks of new infectious diseases in animals for human transmission, provide health risk warnings, improve access to healthcare and address funding needs. He said it would provide a political basis for strengthening the global health sector. The world spends $7.5 trillion each year on health, almost 10 percent of global GDP, Dr. Tedros said, but most of that money is spent in rich countries on treating diseases, not promoting and protecting health. We need reviewing how we view and value health, he said. If the world is to avoid another crisis to this extent, investments in basic public health functions, in particular primary health care, are key, and all pathways should lead to universal health coverage with a strong primary care foundation.
